A reported food poisoning incident involving the consumption of a marlin is an isolated case that is no cause of alarm to the community, according to Commonwealth Healthcare Corp. public information officer Sami Birmingham-Babauta.

It was reported that several people suffered from food poisoning after consuming a marlin that was bought from one of the participants in last weekend's Saipan International Fishing Tournament.

Birmingham-Babauta said the preparation of the food could have caused the person to be sick. "This could be an incident where a fish was stored, prepped, and or cooked poorly that resulted in someone getting ill."

U.S. District Court for the NMI Chief Judge Ramona V. Manglona has granted the U.S. Department of the Navy's and U.S. Department of De-

Manglona said having considered the environmental groups' new argument about why the Siting Study should be considered as extra-record evidence, and the authority provided by all parties, she finds no sufficient cause or manifest error to justify reconsidering her prior ruling.

The groups—Tinian Women As-

Overstaying tourist who worked illegally gets time served

By FERDIE DE LA TORRE
ferdie_delatorre@saipantribune.com
REPORTER

An overstaying tourist, who was allegedly recruited from China on promises of work at a casino construction site and illegally worked as a construction worker and driver for tourists, entered a guilty plea in federal court and was slapped with a sentence of five days of time served Tuesday late afternoon.

Kedong Huang, 32, pleaded guilty to information charging him with one count of improper entry by an alien.

The offense is a misdemeanor that carries a maximum penalty of not more than six months of imprisonment and a fine of up to $3,000.

U.S. District Court for the NMI Chief Judge Ramona V. Manglona said upon release from imprisonment, Huang shall submit to one year of supervised release and comply with conditions.

Manglona said the mandatory conditions are imposed immediately following Huang's release.

As a further condition of supervised release, Huang was ordered to immediately report to an immigration official for deportation proceedings.

The judge said if deportation does not occur or Huang does voluntarily depart the CNMI by July 22 and he is released pending further immigration proceedings, he must immediately report to the U.S. Probation Office by July 23 to begin his term of supervised release.

Huang was ordered to pay a $500 fine and $10 in special assessment fee immediately after sentencing.

Assistant U.S. attorney James Benedetto, counsel for the U.S. government, recommended a sentence of time served.

Benjamin Petersburg, the court-appointed counsel for Huang, concurred with Benedetto's recommendation.

According to the factual basis of the plea agreement, on March 6, 2017, Huang entered the U.S. at the Francisco C. Ada/Saipan International Airport.

To obtain entry, Huang misrepresented to immigration inspectors with U.S. Customs and Border Protection that his purpose for entering the U.S. was for "tourism," when in fact, was solely to find work.

During his immigration inspection interview, Huang concealed the material fact that his intention was to find work and reside in the U.S. beyond the time permitted by his conditional parole status.

Federal agents arrested the defendant last Thursday at the airport after Ports Police officers referred him after encountering him during a traffic violation outside the airport.

CBP officers confirmed from the record that Huang overstayed his CNMI-only conditional parole validity date by more than 400 days.

During an interview with Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) investigators, Huang allegedly stated that while he was in China he met a man from Saipan through the "WeChat" messaging application on the internet.

The Saipan man told him to work at a casino construction site on Saipan and earn $2,000 per month, plus high overtime pay. He, however, upon arriving on Saipan did not work at the casino construction site but at different construction place.

Huang said he later became a driver for tourists.

Korean students entertain man'amkos during visit

Korean students from Jeju Christian School visited the Office of Aging yesterday to share their culture by performing musical dances and other acts to the islands' man'amko.

Jeju Christian School coordinator Kate Park said they visited the Office on Aging and performed in front of the man'amko because it's part of their curriculum as a Christian alternative school.

"We want to give our students a chance to know God and to make him known. This is our motto: To know God and make him known," she said.

Rengesual Yobech, the coordinator of the visit, said the students engaging the elderly of Saipan is part of their message of hope.

"We share the message of hope and entertain our man'amkos and give them something to enjoy as well as [sharing] the message of hope. So, that is the really big purpose here," he said.

Park said the group of students between 13 and 15 years old arrived on Saipan last Monday.

Their presentation to the man'amko included a variety of genres like drama and comedy and dances like the fan dance, hansam dance, and samulnori.

Aging director Walter Manglona thanked the students of Jeju Christian School for the thoughtful visit and their superb performances.

"We always welcome the people from the community or people from abroad who like to come here and entertain our seniors. We routinely get visits from various groups ranging from schools, to private sector, to non-profit, even some churches all over the island. Just performers in general that like to come here and share some of their crafts, art, and culture to the man'amkos. I can tell by the reactions of our clients that they are appreciative and they enjoyed the program," he said.

Ex-convict gets 3 years in jail for possession of 'ice'

By FERDIE DE LA TORRE
ferdie_delatorre@saipantribune.com
REPORTER

A man who was arrested last December for trafficking methamphetamine or "ice," but pleaded guilty to illegal possession of controlled substance, was slapped with a three-year prison term.

Superior Court Associate Judge Joseph N. Camacho sentenced Raymond DLG King, 53, to five years imprisonment all suspended except three years.

Camacho said King shall be eligible for parole after serving the first one year in prison that he shall spend day to day

After completing the prison term, the defendant will be placed on supervised probation for two years.

Last March 27, King entered a guilty plea. He waived to have a pre-sentence investigation report.

King was not eligible to participate in the drug court program due to a prior criminal and drug conviction.

Camacho noted at the previous change of plea hearing that King has a prior conviction for theft by failure to make required disposition of funds received.

King was among six persons arrested for trafficking and illegal possession of methamphetamine in separate operations against "ice" by the CNMI Drug Enforcement Task Force and Drug Enforcement Administration early December of 2017.

Last Dec. 12, the Office of the Attorney General filed an information charging King with two counts of trafficking of controlled substance and two counts of illegal possession of controlled substance. The charges carry a total maximum sentence of 60 years imprisonment.

Last March 8, OAG filed an amended information charging King with only one count of illegal possession of controlled substance. The offense carries a maximum sentence of five years prison term.

According to the factual basis of the plea deal, King unlawfully possessed approximately 0.6 gross grams of crystal methamphetamine on Nov. 27, 2017 on Saipan.

Under the plea deal, the court must consider a range of zero (credit for time served) to three years imprisonment.

Hinds said based on King's criminal actions and the type of crime committed the CNMI, he asked that the court sentence him to three years in jail and two years probation, and a $2,000 fine.

Hinds noted that King has a prior conviction for meth possession in which he was sentenced to 60 days in jail.

Hinds said King has been arrested for domestic violence incidents, involving two separate women.

One of those women, the prosecutor said, then applied for and received a temporary restraining order against King.

Hinds said meth addiction "could" be considered a victimless crime, but not to family members affected by the addict's action.

Furthermore, he said, this defendant has helped to create addicts and hence, victims in the Commonwealth.

Hinds said King is correct that the amount of meth in this case is small.

Nevertheless, Hinds said, King was in possession to sell, which made the situation different than a simple possession.

Assistant public defender Nancy Dominski, counsel for King, recommended a conditional discharge sentence, or in the alternative all time suspended except for time served.

King has been in jail since his arrest on Dec. 4, 2017.

Dominski requested the court to place King on probation for five years.

Dominski said as a condition of probation, King should attend drug/alcohol counseling as specified by probation.

Dominski said King has accepted responsibility and expressed remorse.

She said King admits his addiction, and requests treatment for the same.

Dominski said King has an ex-wife and an 8-year-old son that needs his support.

She said King has one prior non-violent conviction that is over 30 years old.

A Drug Enforcement Task Force agent said that their "cooperating source" was able to purchase from King $180 worth of "ice" and $180 more worth of "ice" during "buy-walk" operations in Chalan Kanoa last Nov. 27 and 28.

Luta Cares founder files candidacy for Rota mayor

Julie Ogo Manglona, the founder of the charitable group “Luta Cares,” filed yesterday her candidacy before the Commonwealth Election Commission in Susupe as an independent for the Rota mayoral seat.

Accompanied by supporters and family members, Manglona submitted her petition for nomination and candidacy at 2:15pm.

Armed with over 300 signatures in her nomination, Manglona was upbeat about the prospect of serving in a new capacity outside of her philanthropic works.

Manglona in an interview said friends and family have approached her to serve as an “agent for change” due to the daily struggles being faced as a direct result of Rota’s small population and geographic difficulties.

She said her biggest goal is to restore trust and confidence in the office and work with Rota’s best and brightest to bring about opportunities for the people of the island.

“I don’t claim to know it all, but will work with qualified people to upgrade facilities, streamline services, foster relationships with incoming investors, and look at finding solutions at keeping current businesses on island employing our local workforce,” she said.

Manglona is currently working as a sales consultant with Joeten Motors Co.

Lee Atalig, who is Manglona’s committee-to-elect chairman, said the people of Rota are confident in her abilities, “she means what she says and says what she means.”

“She is known for her big heart and that’s what’s needed in our leaders in this day and age,” Atalig said.

It’s a crowded mayoral race on Rota at the Nov. 6 general election. Manglona, three other independents, and incumbent Republican Mayor Efrain M. Atalig will be vying for the mayoral seat.

Atalig and Rota Sen. Steve K. Mesngon (independent) had already filed their candidacies for mayor. The two other independents—Crispin M. Ayuyu and Richard E. Taisacan—have yet to file their candidacies.

Manpower needs plague Probation office, Parole board

By ERWIN ENCINARES
erwin_encinares@saipantribune.com
REPORTER

Both the Office of Adult Probation and the Board of Parole in yesterday's annual presentation to the Legislature highlighted the large parity between probation officers and parole officers to cases assigned to them.

In a presentation, both chief probation officer Ursula Aldan and chief parole officer Nick Reyes highlighted the high parity between cases handled to the number of officers in each respective division.

According to statistics offered by Aldan, the Probation office handles 1,400 active cases on probation; 1,100 cases pending review;

» Probation: 2606 total cases, only 10 officers
» Parole: 23 active cases, only three officers and a total of 2,606 cases divided between 10 probation officers.

For the Parole, Reyes noted that there are currently 27 cases of parolees in the CNMI with only three parole officers handling them. Reyes also noted that this coming October, he expects the number increase to about 35 cases.

Both Aldan and Reyes noted the obvious during their presentation: The need for additional manpower. Aldan noted in an interview with Saipan Tribune that local statute does not call for a specific ratio to be held for the probation office, unlike the U.S. mainland.

"...In some states, it specifies [a ratio] per officer. We don't have that here," she said.

"We've always asked for more [full-time employees]," she said, adding that she is aware that the House in the fiscal year 2019 budget bill gave the Probation office eight additional FTE's for the fiscal year.

The Senate has yet to act on the fiscal year 2019 budget bill.

Reyes in a separate interview with Saipan Tribune noted that parolees have committed crimes that vary. Reyes noted that there are drug-related crimes, violent crimes, child molestation, and more.

"We have all kinds of charges that are out on the streets. We are still lacking staff, but we try to put our staff out there, day or night. If an individual falls on the intensive watch, then I try to put my staff on intensive watch on those individuals," Reyes said.

In a statement, House Speaker Rafael S. Demapan (R-Saipan) noted that the annual presentation was both enlightening and appreciated.

"We continue to appreciate and acknowledge their work in making sure that restoring [public] trust and creating hope in the community is foremost. We continue to dialogue with them to find ways on how to assist them [through funding] and in the work they do," Demapan told Saipan Tribune.

ness [i.e. food poisoning], we would see a cluster of cases with [its] symptoms. However, our epidemiologist is not seeing that in his tracking. There is not enough information nor urgency for CHCC to provide comment."

It is not yet known if the person or persons were admitted or not at the hospital but were treated at the hospital's emergency room.

Birmingham-Babauta said that CHCC would release any report to the community in case of an outbreak or any food-borne illnesses. "If we notice a trend or spot on outbreak, we will reach out."

"CHCC will only report on potential community health hazards. Like if one restaurant was serving bad food and many people got sick," she added.

The Bureau of Environmental Health, one of the offices under CHCC's Division of Public Health Services, usually releases advisories to inform the public of possible health risks on hazardous and unsanitary conditions.

They had closed and issued fines to establishments that have been found in violation of local and federal health and safety laws.

BEH has also issued a warning that mobile food vendors need to have the proper documentation to operate a said business and should follow proper food handling guidelines to ensure the quality of their products and the safety of their customers.

The CNMI, so far, has also not been affected by several recalls made by some food companies on their products in the mainland.

MVA, NMDOA clean up Laulau Beach

Staff from the Marianas Visitors Authority and members of the Northern Marianas Dive Operators Association cleaned up Laulau Beach on June 29, 2018, collecting over 300 pounds of trash and recyclable material.

"Laulau is one of our most popular dive sites and is the regular focus of a cleanup effort by the MVA and our partners at NMDOA," said MVA managing director Christopher A. Concepcion. "We ask all beachgoers to help us maintain the excellent reputation of The Marianas for snorkeling and diving by ensuring they remove their trash from the beach. We collected an inordinate number of plastic bottles, aluminum cans, plastic straws and other garbage left behind by visitors and residents who frequent Laulau. This is unacceptable. We need stricter anti-litter law enforcement at this site. We cut the grass and trimmed trees around the parking area to make it more accessible for vehicles. Kudos to the MVA and NMDOA teams for their hard work."

NMDOA and the MVA jointly adopted the popular dive spot several years ago and conduct quarterly cleanups at the site. (PR)

House Bill 20-120 that about 907 government employees did not receive their within grade increase in salaries, or WGI, when the government imposed a government-wide financial austerity measure.

Maratita's H.B. 20-120 seeks to retroactively address the salaries owed to those afected by the withholding of the WGI salary increases.

Demapan said yesterday in the House Ways and Means Committee meeting at the House chamber on Capitol Hill that according to OPM, the amounts owed to the 907 total at about $4.2 million.

"OPM is still working on the figures and as of their 23rd report, it is at $4 million. [This amount] covers for the 907 employees that were deemed eligible [by OPM]," said Demapan in an interview.

He said, citing OPM, that over 200 employees were not deemed eligible to receive payment if the bill is enacted.

"We still expect that number to go up," continued Demapan, referring to the 907 eligible active or inactive employees. "Honestly, at this point, I do not know what the final figure is."

Maratita noted during committee discussions on the bill that OPM continues to review several hundreds of files for both active and inactive government employees affected by the financial austerity measures.

The committee adopted H.B. 20-120 unanimously without amendments. The bill now heads to the House floor for review in a future session.

and gives them the opportunity to develop itself. But as much as we want development to coexist, we have to plan modestly on how to develop the northern side," said Guerrero.

"We don't want to overwhelm it because, No. 1, we have the tourist sites in the Marpi area. We have to be very conservative and protect that area. We want to keep those tourists area intact."

The Last Command Post, Banzai and Suicide cliffs, Bird Island Lookout, Grotto dive site, and Kalabera Cave are some of the tourist destinations up north aside from the steep hills that local bikers love to challenge.

Guerrero said that infrastructure is the next thing that needs to be considered. "As much as we want development up there, infrastructure must be considered. If you have other or additional major development power and sewer will be overwhelmed dramatically."

"[The Commonwealth

Utilities Corp.] would not be capable to sustain additional output of power and waste. We don't know the exact size that's in place a number of years ago, so those need to be upgraded," added the precinct 1 lawmaker.

American Sinopan is building its Saipan Garden Resort in Tanapag, which they dubbed as the "gateway to the north," while New Century Hotel LLC is going to convert the former Sebastian Building to a 48-room hotel and Bridge Capital LLC is redeveloping the old Plumeria Resort.

Aqua Resort Club, Kensington Hotel, and Mariana Resort & Spa are the hotels operating in the north.

E-Land, which owns and operates Kensington aside from Coral Ocean Point Golf Resort and Pacific Islands Club Saipan, unveiled a bold plan of renovating the abandoned La Fiesta Mall nearly two years ago.

Imperial Pacific International (CNMI) LLC is also looking to take over Mariana Resort's facilities and hopes to build a water-theme park up north.

JUDGE

Administrative Procedure Act (APA) over their decision to relocate 5,000 U.S. Marines from Okinawa to Guam and to conduct live-training on Tinian and Pagan.

The Navy and Defense, through counsel U.S. Department of Justice, moved to strike the groups' citation to extra-record evidence.

DOJ trial attorney Joshua P. Wilson said in violation of Manglona's order excluding the Siting Study from the administrative record in this case, the groups cited and relied on that document, and attached the Siting Study to its opposition to the U.S. government's motion for summary judgment.

In their opposition brief to the U.S. government's motion for summary judgment, the groups have referred to the Siting Study to refute Navy's and Defense's claim that the CNMT project "is designed to serve the training needs of 'all U.S. and allied forces in the Pacific,' regardless of whether they are stationed in the Marianas."

In granting defendants' motion to strike, Manglona said in their motion for summary judgment, the groups have already argued, based on the administrative record, that no other forces would make more than "occasional use of some of the training facilities" proposed for the Mariana Islands, and therefore the CJMT is inherently connected with the Guam relocation decisions.

The judge said what plaintiffs (groups) want is for more specific information about which units in the Mariana Islands were affected in order to argue that there is "no need for the CJMT program to pursue the...training projects on Tinian or Pagan" without the Marines who would be relocated from Okinawa and therefore the actions are connected.

Manglona said even if the administrative record does not have a specific document that describes the specific units using the training facilities in the Mariana Islands, the "general subject matter" of who would be using the training facilities is addressed in the record, as demonstrated by plaintiffs' own motion for summary judgment.

Manglona said given the narrow circumstances in which a court may consider extra-record evidence, she concludes there is no manifest error or sufficient cause to reconsider her decision to exclude the Siting Study from consideration.

The judge agrees that the groups' request is not legally time-barred, but agrees with the Navy and Defense that it was not appropriate for the groups to rely on the Siting Study in their brief in opposition to defendants' motion for summary judgment without first submitting a separate request for reconsideration.

Nonetheless, Manglona said, she considers the groups' request on the merits.

Family grief discussed at Rotary Club meeting

By FAHIM UDDIN
fahimuddin489@gmail.com
REPORTER

We Remember Them, CNMI's Jill Derickson talked about family grief during the Rotary Club of Saipan meeting last Tuesday at the Hyatt Regency Saipan.

In recognition of the Bereaved Parents Awareness Month this July, Derickson gave an orientation to explain the effects and the ways the community can support people who have lost their loved ones.

She made an example of family grief by providing her own experience. She said her 29-year-old sister, Debbie, was murdered in Santa Clara, California back in 1979.

After the incident, she received grief support training for a period of time. From her training, she learned that most people have gone through grief somehow.

Derickson said common feelings when facing grief are sadness, anger, guilt, depression, tears, and anxiety.

"[One] may have difficulty in making decisions, inability to concentrate, disinterest [in] job-related details, frustration and irritability, depression and mood swings, and marital and family problems," she said.

Through experience, she witnessed a research project proving that a loss of productivity and rise in accident rates occurs when suffering from emotional stress.

Derickson goes on to say that as a member of our community, we should show support by providing either sympathy or empathy.

"I say 'make a difference' because you cannot fix it of course. You can't bring the deceased person back... a hug, a touch, a simple 'I'm so sorry' offers real comfort and support."

To commemorate the Bereaved Parents Month, We Remember Them, CNMI will hold the annual "Walk to Remember" on July 26, 5:30pm starting from Minachom Atdao Pavilion to the Atkins Kroll intersection. The Saipan community is invited to show support to the grieved families. Participants are advised to wear black for grief and white for hope. Also, they encourage people to bring finger foods to share.

'Personal medication' policy may have caused rumor

Medical staff of the Commonwealth Healthcare Corp. suspects that patients who misunderstood the "personal medication" policy might have caused the rumor that the hospital is running out of its supply of medication.

CHCC has assured the public that it has enough supplies of medication to treat its patients, dismissing rumors that are circulating in the community that they don't have enough supply of medicines to treat its patients.

"We recognize that the inconsistent operating history of the hospital may make these rumors seem reasonable, but put simply, there is no shortage of medication at CHCC," said CHCC public information officer Sami Birmingham-Babauta.

She said that it wasn't clear where and when the rumors started circulating, and who spread it around.

The personal medication policy controls the patient's use of medications they brought home while they were admitted at the Commonwealth Health Center. It's a general rule at CHC that patients are not allowed to take medications they brought home while they were admitted at the hospital.

However, there are exceptions like when a patient has been accustomed to a specific brand of medication that's not sold at the hospital's pharmacy and another alternative is also not available.

Patients can also bring their medication given to them at the hospital in order for them to show it to their healthcare providers during their assessments.

"If a patient is admitted with their home supply of medication on hand and does not formally request to use their personal medication, it is secured by the nursing staff and returned to the patient at discharge," said CHCC in a statement.

CHCC patients admitted in the hospital and those at the outpatient are always informed of their rights before being attended to at the hospital. Those utilizing the outpatient services can get a copy of their registration.

"Patients have the right to make a verbal complaint to a staff member present at the time of the issue or file a grievance with the hospital," added CHCC in their statement released to members of the local media.

"Grievances forms can be obtained from the cashier on the main floor next to the emergency room registration and submitted into the box on the adjoining wall labeled 'patient grievances.'"

CHCC is also encouraging the community to use the "contact us" section on the chcc.gov.mp website for questions, comments, and other concerns they would like to inform their officials.

All the concerns submitted on the website are reviewed by the staff and sent to the person that would address the issue. (Jon Perez)

SANTA RITA, Guam—U.S. Naval Base Guam (NBG) Commanding Officer Capt. Jeffrey Grimes is inviting former residents of Sumay village and their descendants to a memorial Mass on NBG July 20.

The event is coordinated with the Santa Rita Mayor's Office as part of the island's Liberation Day festivities.

"Our customers make us No. 1 that is why we continue to be Saipan's one-stop entertainment. We value our members and make them avail of membership bonuses and rewards and most of all our excellent service," he said.

"We have gaming machines, raffles, live band, good food, and drinks. It is entertainment like no other and I can say we are the most professional and organized entertainment club on Saipan," he added.

Club C food and beverage manager Anita Go said that business has been doing good despite the growing competition on island. "We are very happy that we have reached four years in the business and we promise that we will continue providing games and entertainment to our members. We owe our success to our regular customers and that is why they can only expect the best from us."

"We treat customers like family and we provide an atmosphere for people to have a good time at Club C because it is not only for casino goers. We welcome members and non-members to enjoy live entertainment, drinks at the bar, and delicious food from our kitchen. We also have a VIP room which can be reserved for 'karaoke night' that can accommodate 25-30 people," she added.

"We have a 'bucket of beer' promo. One bucket has five assorted beers in bottles or six assorted beers in cans for only $20. If a customer orders a bucket, they get one appetizer for free. Our Carlsberg Tower is also available for only $15," Go said.

Chow said that the public can expect more from Club C in the years to come. "We are here for the long term. We are part of the community and they can rely on us to give them good entertainment and value for their money."

"Club C is always moving to greater heights, expanding ourselves, and we are here for our customers," he added. (Bea Cabrera)

2 owners of company indicted over alleged CW1 scheme

The two owners of a company were indicted in federal court for allegedly engaging in fraud in the applications for CNMI-Only Transitional Worker program (CW1) permits.

Mizanur Khan, president and part owner of K.C.A. Corp., was charged with four counts of fraud and misuse of visas and permits and two counts of mail fraud.

Kosuke Tomokiyo, vice president and part owner of K.C.A. Corp., was charged with only a count of fraud and misuse of visas and permits.

Khan, who was arrested, pleaded not guilty during the initial appearance hearing last Monday.

Manglona

Khan's detention hearing will be today, Thursday, at 3pm.

The arraignment for Tomokiyo will also be today, Thursday, at 10:30am. U.S. District Court for the NMI Chief Judge Ramona V. Manglona ordered that Tomokiyo shall remain at liberty under his own personal recognizance.

Assistant U.S. attorney Eric O'Malley appeared for the government at the hearing.

According to the indictment, on Aug. 5, 2015, Khan falsely represented to U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services that Kawsar Hamid, Monir Hossain, and Md. Abul

Hossen, would be employed by K.C.A. as an "operation service worker (charcoal maker)" and that they would be employed in that capacity for 40 hours per week, for a period of one year.

On Aug. 22, 2016, Khan and Tomokiyo allegedly falsely represented to USCIS that Tomokiyo had previously been and was to be employed by K.C.A. as a "sales manager," and that Tomokiyo had been employed in that capacity since January 2016.

On June 6, 2015 and Aug. 22, 2016, Khan, for the purpose of executing the scheme allegedly delivered by the U.S. Postal Services and commercial interstate carrier DHL, respectively, several I-129CW petitions. (Ferdie de la Torre)

The 2018 Liberation Day queen is set to represent the Marianas in Nagoya, Japan this August.

According to Saipan Mayor David M. Apatang, the Saipan Mayor's Office will be sending Brinae Jessilyn Cruz to the 20th Annual Nippon Domannaka Festival along with the Liberation Day Royal Court chair Monique Boyer Sablan. The festival is believed to be the largest cultural festival in Nagoya.

"They will be going to the cultural festival in Japan... to participate in it with the MVA (Marianas Visitors Authority) and represent the CNMI," he said.

Apatang said that he sends Liberation Day queens to the Domannaka Festival for the past few years because it allows them to get exposed to a different culture at a young age.

"We always send our queens to Japan to experience an international culture... that's one way to get experience and they also get to promote the CNMI with MVA... that's our main reason for sending them there," he said.

According to Sablan, Cruz will serve as a youth ambassador of the CNMI during the Domannaka Festival that will last five days.

"They do this every year... it's something that the mayor's office gets invited to and it's a good opportunity for him to

NMHC voucher program to re-open

By KIMBERLY A. BAUTISTA
kimberly_bautista@saipantribune.com
REPORTER

The Northern Marianas Housing Corp. aims to re-open its Section 8 voucher program due to its low waiting list count.

Last Monday, the NMHC held a public hearing to discuss its Streamlined 5-year

Annual PHA Plan.

To successfully transition into the next five-year plan, NMHC is required by the U.S. Housing and Urban Development to have about 500 new applicants on the Housing Choice Voucher Program (Section 8) waiting list in order to grant NMHC the funding to continue to run the program.

Unfortunately, there are currently only 108 families on NMHC's waiting list and is in need of over 300 more before the start of the next fiscal year.

On Monday NMHC will re-open the Section 8 voucher program that was closed early on in the last five-year plan so families can start filling out applications.

The Section 8 voucher program aids low-income families in their housing needs. The Section 8 program allows private landlords to rent apartments and homes at fair market rates to qualified low-income tenants, with a rental subsidy.

According to NMHC director Jesse Palacios, NMHC has been troubled with the recent response rates received from families on the waiting list and encourages families to make sure that all contact information are correct so that they do not miss the opportunity to avail of a voucher.

Palacios said that in the last four years, 315 vouchers have been given out and there are 48 more to be given.

Interested voucher applicants may visit the NMHC starting on Monday, June 23, to fill out an application.

Trump dances to Putin's choreography

The much-awaited summit in Helsinki between President Donald Trump and Russian President Vladimir Putin certainly had the stuff of spectacle. There they were, Vlad and the Dealmaker, dancing around questions of meddling, Ukraine and Syria like two Fred Astaires. It all went according to the program. Unfortunately, a program choreographed by Putin.

Americans and much of the rest of the world had wondered whether and how Trump would confront Putin over Russian interference in the U.S. presidential election. Heightening the curiosity: the Justice Department's blockbuster indictments last week accusing 12 Russian military intelligence agents of hacking into Hillary Clinton's presidential campaign, the Democratic National Committee, the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee and state boards of elections.

The summit afforded Trump an ideal setting to bluntly tell the ex-KGB agent that America won't stand for tampering with a U.S. election—a message particularly resonant with midterm elections just around the corner. He could have sounded tough, inflexible even, on an issue so pivotal to American democracy.

Instead, at a news conference following the meeting with Putin, Trump not only came across mealy-mouthed, he expressed doubt about his own intelligence community's findings about Russia's involvement in meddling in the presidential campaign. "They think it's Russia," Trump said, referring to American intelligence officials. "I have President Putin—he just said it's not Russia. I don't see any reason why it would be."

How about 12 reasons—the 12 indicted Russian spies? It's hard to size up what's riskier: Putin the mischief-maker or an American president who refuses to believe his own intelligence community's legwork on Putin's chicanery. Last week, Trump's director of national intelligence, Dan Coats, likened the Russian cyberrisk to the U.S. to the specter of terrorism in the lead-up to the Sept. 11 attacks on America. "The warning lights are blinking red again," Coats said.

The risk is real, Mr. President, and it's ominous. At the core of Putin's playbook is this credo: If the subterfuge works, then use it again. Failing to see the peril in Putin's ways endangers America and its allies. "The president must appreciate that Russia is not our ally," House Speaker Paul Ryan, a Republican from Wisconsin, said after the Putin-Trump news conference. Russia, he added, "remains hostile to our most basic values and ideals."

When the question of the Russian agents' extradition to the U.S. came up, Putin injected a plot twist. Instead of flatly refusing such a demand or handing over the agents to the U.S. to face trial, Putin suggested that U.S. special counsel Robert Mueller's investigators could travel to Russia to observe while Russian officials question the 12 agents about their actions. In return, though, Washington would have to allow Russian agents to conduct investigative work in the U.S. on topics that interest Moscow. Trump should have laughed at the idea—instead he called Putin's nonsense "a generous offer."

Mueller is seasoned enough to know Russian officials questioning Russian intelligence agents about a Russian plot to meddle in an American presidential election isn't worth a ruble. If Mueller and his team do end up making the journey, however, one word of caution once they arrive in Moscow: Don't drink the tea.

Trump's deference to Putin is less about collusion than character

Last week, I wrote that the best way to think about a Trump Doctrine is as nothing more than Trumpism on the international stage. By Trumpism, I do not mean a coherent ideological program, but a psychological phenomenon, or simply the manifestation of his character.

Monday, we literally saw President Trump on an international stage, in Helsinki, and he seemed hell-bent on proving me right.

During a joint news appearance with Russian President Vladimir Putin, Trump demonstrated that, when put to the test, he cannot see any issue through a prism other than his grievances and ego.

In a performance that should elicit some resignations from his administration, the president sided with Russia over America's national security community, including Dan Coats, the Trump-appointed director of national intelligence.

Days ago, Coats issued a blistering warning that not only had Russia meddled in our election—undisputed by almost everyone save the president himself—but that it is preparing to do so again. But when asked about Russian interference in Helsinki, Trump replied, "All I can do is ask the question. My people came to me, Dan Coats came to me and some others. They said they think it's Russia. I have President Putin. He just said it's not Russia. I will say this. I don't see any reason why it would be [Russia]. ... I have confidence in both parties."

Separately, when asked about the frosty relations between the two countries, Trump said, "I hold both countries responsible. ... I think we're all to blame. ... I do feel that we have both made some mistakes."

Amid these and other appalling statements, Trump made it clear that he can only understand the investigation into Russian interference as an attempt to rob him of credit for his electoral victory, and thus to delegitimize his presidency.

For most people with a grasp of the facts—supporters and critics alike—the question of Russian interference and the question of Russian collusion with the Trump campaign are separate. Russia did interfere in the election, full stop. Whether there was collusion is still an open question, even if many Trump supporters have made up their minds about it. Whether Russian interference, or collusion, got Trump over the finish line is ultimately unknowable, though I think it's very unlikely.

But for Trump these distinctions are meaningless. Even when his own Department of Justice indicts 12 Russian intelligence agents, the salient issue for Trump in Helsinki is that "they admit these are not people involved in the campaign." All you need to know is: We ran a brilliant campaign, and that's why I'm president.

The great parlor game in Washington (and beyond) is to theorize why Trump is so incapable of speaking ill of Putin and so determined to make apologies for Russia.

Among the self-styled "resistance," the answer takes several sometimes overlapping, sometimes contradictory forms. One theory is that the Russians have "kompromat"—that is, embarrassing or incriminating intelligence on Trump. Another is that he is a willing asset of the Russians—"Agent Orange"—with whom he colluded to win the presidency.

These theories can't be wholly dismissed, even if some overheated versions get way ahead of the available facts. But their real shortcoming is that they are less plausible than the Aesopian explanation: This is who Trump is. Even if Russia hadn't meddled in the election at all, Trump would still admire Putin because Trump admires men like Putin—which is why he's praised numerous other dictators and strongmen.

The president's steadfast commitment to a number of policies—animosity toward NATO, infatuation with protectionism, an Obama-esque obsession with eliminating nuclear weapons, and his determination that a "good relationship" with Russia should be a policy goal rather than a means to one—may have some ideological underpinning. (These policies all seem to be rooted in intellectual fads of the 1980s.)

But Trump's stubborn refusal to listen to his own advisers in the matter of the Russia investigation likely stems from his inability to admit that his instincts are ever wrong. As always, Trump's character trumps all.

Have patience

Around last month, a video taken from a surveillance camera went viral on social media. Two female tourists were walking at the side of Beach Road, until a car drives up behind them and hits one lady (De La Torre, Ferdie. "Tourist hurt in hit-and-run" Saipan Tribune, 12 June 2018). Whether it was an accident or not, this action badly affects our island community.

I am writing this to express my concern of the safety on our island and the importance of tourism. I know that is common sense to have sidewalks on both sides of the road, which should've been done a long time ago. However, tourists should also know the boundaries. According to Daniel Durkin at the comments of the article "Tourist hurt in hit-and-run," he brings up his experience with tourists walking on the roads—which happens often on our island.

Perhaps a solution to this could be for companies involving tourists (such as the airport, hotels, or car rental companies) to give a brief explanation on safety. As for the locals living here, please have patience on tourists since the industry brings a lot for our islands.

A 9-year-old girl gets unexpected justice when her abuser gets prison

Thirty-seven-year-old Chris Moore of Marion, Iowa took the witness stand in the Story County Court-house to read a victim impact statement. In a firm but tearful voice, he told the 73-year-old man who had sexually abused his daughter: "For 30-some odd years, there was a man that I held more respect for than anyone else. I placed him on a pedestal, not knowing the dark secret that had been withheld from me."

That man was his father, James Moore, who took a plea agreement June 4 to lascivious acts with his 9-year-old granddaughter.

"This monster stole the innocence of my little girl," Chris Moore continued Monday. "She is not the same anymore. Though children know there are evil people, he continued, "it is usually not someone who is supposed to protect them and keep them safe."

The hushed courtroom also would hear statements from the 9-year-old, read aloud by a prosecutor, and from her mother, brother and maternal grandfather.

All described a vibrant child who used to spring out of bed announcing "It's a beautiful day" but now fears leaving the house. They spoke of the depression and post-traumatic stress that have had her in therapy for about 10 months. They recounted how she would hit, kick, scream and cry when she had to go to school her fourth-grade year, and how she had to be literally carried in and handed over to a staff member.

Sometimes her uncontrollable rage and property destruction would land her in a small, cold, empty "quiet room" with a concrete floor. "I hated being in there," she wrote.

Her parents believed their daughter, now 10, from the minute she came into their room the morning after the events of last August. But some of Chris Moore's family sided with his father and distanced themselves from the couple and their daughter when they chose to go to police and file charges.

James Moore's supporters submitted letters to the court describing a devoted Christian, husband, father and grandfather. They noted his military service in Vietnam and Cuba, his help rescuing a man from a burning truck and his charitable donations. Chris Moore's mother, Colette, said her husband "would never drive by a stranded motorist or leave another person in a dangerous situation."

The Rev. Tom Nesbitt of the Ames Cornerstone Church wrote of James Moore: "He is a dear and humble man, greatly broken over what he is accused of and genuinely repentant over any activity that places his Christian testimony, marriage and family relations in any measure of question."

It's bad enough these letters don't mention the victim, and that the last one sidesteps James Moore's admission to a Class C felony. But it is deeply disturbing that anyone could suggest going to church or giving to charity could cancel out molesting a child, or otherwise, try to normalize such aberrant behavior. Lisa Moore testified that her husband, Chris, has lost relations with his mother, father and two sisters over this. Enablers must carry that on their consciences, too.

Under the negotiated plea agreement, James Moore was to get a suspended 10-year sentence and serve no prison time and would appear on the Iowa sex offender registry. Asked by District Judge Bethany Currie if he had anything to say, he said he was ashamed and sorry and prayed for forgiveness.

After a few more formalities, the judge, who was appointed just last month, caught everyone by surprise, overriding the plea agreement and imposing an actual sentence of up to 10 years. That left Chris and Lisa Moore jubilant and some on the other side in tears, but declining to be interviewed. "Just say we love him and we support him," said one sobbing woman.

County Attorney Jessica Reynolds said later that it's unusual in her experience for a judge not to follow a plea agreement, but that she supports this decision. Reynolds had seen a plea bargain as a way to protect the child from the trauma of being deposed.

"Child sexual abuse is so horrific, it changes who people are and the course of their lives," she said, adding that based on her experience in three Iowa counties, it is rampant and vastly under-reported. Often the families just keep the child apart from the abuser. But these parents, she said, "did exactly what they needed to do. They believed their child. They reported it. They didn't make excuses."

prison, and serve an average of 139 months. But in Iowa courts, offenders often get probation. And then there is the statute of limitations, which requires criminal charges in child sex-abuse cases to be brought within 10 years after the victim turns 18. While other states have done away with limits, despite documented child abuse cases going back generations, Iowa Democratic lawmakers' proposals to loosen the statute were blocked by the Republican majority in the last legislative session.

Had they passed, this story might have had an even more powerful ending.

In the course of investigating James Moore, reports from the Story County Sheriff's Department show, an investigator interviewed at least four other female relatives who said they, too, had been abused by him as children. One of those was James Moore's biological daughter, Jill Beard, who is estranged from the family because of it.

Now 50, she lives in Missouri, and told me in a phone interview that she left Iowa in her 20s because of the abuse. She told police that began when she was about 8 and lasted till she was 12, and that it included removing her clothes and touching her vagina and putting his penis in her hands. In that police interview last December, she mentioned four other women who had said he did sexual things to them. The report said James Moore had admitted to looking through a window at one girl when she was showering.

But Beard never told anyone until about 13 years ago, when she wrote her parents and grandparents a letter. "It's so ugly. You feel so much shame your entire life," she said. "All the people around you love him so much." Because it was past the statute of limitations, criminal charges could not be brought in her case.

The letter prompted a visit from James Moore's wife, (her stepmother) Colette, "to tell me what a hero I was." It also, according to the police report, prompted Colette to leave James for about six months, when he was supposed to be getting treatment. Beard told me she later ran into her father, who apologized briefly. So Beard wept with joy after getting the call Monday about his sentence.

"I just released 45 years of holding it in," she said.

A niece of James Moore's, Nichole Ledbetter, also told me in a phone interview from her Ohio residence that he abused her multiple times about 30 years ago, when she was in third and fourth grades. She was interviewed by the same Story County investigator in January, who wrote in his report that she said she had told her parents as a child and again in college and in her 30s, but they didn't believe her. Her mother, Carmen, is Colette's sister. Ledbetter told police the abuse consisted of digital penetration, and that she had watched him do the same thing to another girl related to him.

"Nichole recently called Colette, who told Nichole she believed that Jim did abuse her, and apologized," the police report says.

After James Moore's recent arrest, Ledbetter said her parents paid her a visit to say they now believe her. Ledbetter's mother also attended James Moore's plea agreement hearing and sentencing, sitting on Chris Moore's family's side of the aisle.

Ledbetter attributes several failed marriages and a lot of counseling to the abuses.

Had the Iowa Legislature done the right thing last year, other women could have had their day in court. But for now, Beard and Ledbetter savor a gutsy 9-year-old's victory as their own. Maybe this young girl and her parents will serve as examples and beacons of hope to other children and their families to speak up, believe and support your kids, and protect other people's by reporting abuses to police.

And maybe by signaling she means business, this judge will shock others into checking their own responses. Meanwhile, never, ever make excuses for people who prey sexually on children, no matter how much they may pray in church.

2ND TIME AROUND PROJECT

IPI donates 50 boxes of clothing

Imperial Pacific International's initiative supporting the community continues with at least 11 nonprofit organizations and government agencies getting clothing donations to support their outreach programs.

Under the "2nd Time Around Project," a clothing drive of IPI's Corporate Social Responsibility program, the said nonprofit organizations and government agencies received more than 50 boxes of clothing. These include slacks/pants, button-up shirts, and blazers, among others.

IPI-CSR donated to the Office on Aging, Empty Vessel Ministry, Maternal and Child Health Bureau, Substance Abuse Rehabilitation Program (HOPE Recovery Center), Women's Affairs Office, Ayuda Network, Respite Care Service Program, Domestic Violence Awareness Coalition, Veterans Affairs Office, Commonwealth Women's Association, and Karidat Social Services.

The donations were held from July 13 to 17, directly to these 11 nonprofit organization and government agencies-partners of IPI.

The "2nd Time Around

IN PUSH TO AVOID LIABILITY

MGM sues Vegas shooting victims

LAS VEGAS (AP)—MGM Resorts International has sued hundreds of victims of the deadliest mass shooting in modern U.S. history in a bid to avoid liability for the gunfire that rained down from its Mandalay Bay casino-resort in Las Vegas.

The company argues in lawsuits filed in Nevada, California, New York and other states this week and last that it has “no liability of any kind” to survivors or families of slain victims under a federal law enacted after the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks.

The lawsuits target victims who have sued the company and voluntarily dismissed their claims or have threatened to sue after a gunman shattered the windows of his Mandalay Bay suite and fired on a crowd gathered below for a country music festival.

High-stakes gambler Stephen Paddock killed 58 people and injured hundreds more last year before killing himself. Victims with active lawsuits against MGM don’t face the company’s legal claim.

MGM says the 2002 law limits liabilities when a company or group uses services certified by the U.S. Department of Homeland Security and mass attacks occur. The company says it is not liable because its security vendor for the concert, Contemporary Services Corp., was federally certified at the time of the Oct. 1 shooting.

MGM claims the victims—through actual and threatened lawsuits—have implicated CSC’s services because they involve concert security, including training, emergency response and evacuation.

“If defendants were injured by Paddock’s assault, as they allege, they were inevitably injured both because Paddock fired from his window and because they remained in the line of fire at the concert. Such claims inevitably implicate security at the concert—and may result in loss to CSC,” according to the MGM lawsuits.

CSC’s general counsel, James Service, told The Associated Press on Tuesday that it doesn’t comment on litigation involving the company or a third party.

MGM wants a court to declare that the U.S. law “precludes any finding of liability” against the company “for any claim for injuries arising out of or related to Paddock’s mass attack.”

Brian Claypool, an attorney who was at the music festival during the shooting, called the lawsuits a “hypocritical maneuver” that will turn into a “public relations nightmare for MGM.”

“We collectively view this as a bullying tactic to intimidate the survivors who are rightfully seeking social change and redress through the litigation process,” Claypool, who represents dozens of victims, said in a statement.

MGM spokeswoman Debra DeShong said Congress determined that federal courts should handle any lawsuits over mass attacks where federally certified security services were provided.

“While we expected the litigation that followed, we also feel strongly that victims and the community should be able to recover and find resolution in a timely manner,” she said in a statement Tuesday.

Attorney Robert Eglet, who represents victims in a lawsuit pending in federal court in Nevada, also decried the casino operator’s move, saying the company is filing complaints nationwide in search of a sympathetic judge. He told AP he has been flooded with calls from victims.

Texas Instruments’ new CEO loses job for personal misconduct

DALLAS (AP)—Texas Instruments has dumped CEO Brian Crutcher for personal misconduct less than two months after he took over the job, ruining the chip maker’s hopes for a smooth transition to new leadership. Crutcher resigned Tuesday after TI’s board determined he violated the company’s code of conduct with behavior the company said was not consistent with its ethics and core values. TI emphasized Crutcher’s transgression wasn’t related to its operations or finances. The company, however, declined to elaborate on what he did wrong in response to an inquiry. The Dallas company is bringing back Crutcher’s predecessor as CEO, TI Chairman Rich Templeton. Crutcher replaced Templeton as CEO June 1 as part of what the Dallas company described as a “well-planned succession” when the change was announced in January.

Lawmakers warn Trump tariffs threaten local newspapers

WASHINGTON (AP)—Members of Congress warned Tuesday that newspapers in their home states are in danger of reducing news coverage, laying off workers or going out of business if the United States maintains recently imposed tariffs on Canadian newsprint. The Trump administration ordered the tariffs in response to a complaint from a paper producer in Washington state. It argues that Canadian competitors take advantage of government subsidies to sell their product at unfairly low prices. About a dozen lawmakers testified Tuesday morning against making the tariffs permanent during a United States International Trade Commission hearing. The commission is reviewing whether U.S. producers of certain groundwood paper products, including newsprint, have been materially injured because of the imports from Canada. The commission’s findings help determine whether the Department of Commerce makes the tariffs permanent. Newsprint is generally the second-largest expense for

Trump backs off siding with Russia over US intelligence

WASHINGTON (AP)—Blistered by bipartisan condemnation of his embrace of a longtime U.S. enemy, President Donald Trump on Tuesday backed away from his public undermining of American intelligence agencies, saying he simply mispoke when he said he saw no reason to believe Russia had interfered in the 2016 U.S. election.

Rebuked as never before by his own party, including a stern pushback from usually reserved Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell, the U.S. president sought to end 27 hours of recrimination by delivering a rare admission of error.

“The sentence should have been, ‘I don’t see any reason why I wouldn’t, or why it wouldn’t be Russia’ instead of ‘why it would,’” Trump said of the comments he had made standing alongside Vladimir Putin on Monday’s summit stage in Helsinki.

That didn’t explain why Trump, who had tweeted a half-dozen times and sat for two television interviews since the Putin news conference, waited so long to correct his remarks. And the scripted cleanup pertained only to the least defensible of his comments.

A woman holds a sign depicting Russian President Vladimir Putin and President Donald Trump during a protest outside the White House, Tuesday, July 17, 2018, in Washington.

He didn’t reverse other statements in which he gave clear credence to Putin’s “extremely strong and powerful” denial of Russian involvement, raised doubts about his own intelligence agencies’ conclusions and advanced discredited conspiracy theories about election meddling.

He also accused past American leaders, rather than Russia’s destabilizing actions in the U.S. and around the world, for the souring of relations between two countries. And he did not address his other problematic statements during a week-long Europe tour, in which he sent the NATO alliance into emergency session and assailed British Prime Minister Theresa May as she was hosting him for an official visit.

“I accept our intelligence community’s conclusion that Russia’s meddling in the 2016 election took place,” Trump conceded Tuesday. But even then he made a point of adding, “It could be other people also. A lot of people out there. There was no collusion at all.”

Moments earlier, McConnell felt the need to reassure America’s allies in Europe with whom Trump clashed during his frenzied trip last week.

With no if’s or but’s, the GOP leader declared, “The European countries are our friends, and the Russians are not.”

Immigrant children describe hunger and cold in detention

SANTA ANA, Calif. (AP)—Wet and muddy from their trek across the Mexican border, immigrant children say they sat or lay on the cold, concrete floor of the immigration holding centers where they were taken.

It was hard to sleep with lights shining all night and guards kicking their feet, they say. They were hungry, after being given what they say were frozen sandwiches and smelly food.

Younger children cried in caged areas where they were crammed in with teens, and they clamored for their parents. Toilets were filthy, and running water was scarce, they say. They waited, unsure and frightened of what the future might bring.

“I didn’t know where my mother was,” said Griselda, 16, of Guatemala, who entered the U.S. with her mother in the McAllen, Texas, area. “I saw girls ask where their mothers were, but the guards would not tell them.”

The children’s descriptions of various facilities are part of a voluminous and at times scathing report filed in federal court this week in Los Angeles in a case over whether the Trump administration is meeting its obligations under a long-standing settlement governing how young immigrants should be treated in custody.

Dozens of volunteer lawyers, interpreters and other legal workers fanned out across the Southwest in June and July to interview more than 200 immigrant parents and children in holding facilities, detention centers and a youth shelter.

Advocates said the government isn’t complying with the decades-old Flores agreement, which lays out detention conditions and release requirements for immigrant children.

“They have spoken out loud and clear, and what they’ve said is they are experiencing enforced hunger, enforced dehydration, enforced sleeplessness,” said Peter Schey, an attorney for the children who has asked the court to appoint a special monitor to enforce the agreement. “They are terrorized, and I think it is time for the courts and the public to hear their voices.”

The Department of Homeland Security, which oversees immigration and border enforcement, did not immediately comment. But in their own reports to the court last month, government monitors said that immigration authorities were complying with the settlement agreement.

In his report, Henry Moak Jr., juvenile coordinator for U.S. Customs and Border Protection, documented the air temperature as appropriate at a number of border facilities and said he drank the water himself from five-gallon containers at a processing center in McAllen.

BUSINESS BRIEFS

Papa John’s founder: Stepping down as chairman a mistake

NEW YORK (AP)—Papa John’s founder John Schnatter says the pizza chain doesn’t know how to handle a “crisis based on misinformation” and that he made a “mistake” in agreeing to step down as chairman. Schnatter says the board requested that he step down as chairman without “any investigation” and he should not have complied, according to a letter his representative says was sent to the board Saturday. The contents of the letter were first reported by the Wall Street Journal. Papa John’s, which has started scrubbing Schnatter’s image from its marketing materials and says it is evaluating all ties with Schnatter, did not respond to a request for comment. The company said over the weekend it “specifically requested that Mr. Schnatter cease all media appearances, and not make any further statements to the media regarding the company, its business or employees.” Schnatter, who remains on Papa John’s board, is the company’s largest shareholder.

Rohingya prepare as monsoon arrives

UKHIYA, Bangladesh (AP)—The hill on which the young woman's shelter is being built is so unstable that the earth crumbles under your feet. The threat of landslides is so dire that her neighbors have evacuated. Though living here could spell doom as the monsoon rains fall, she will live here anyway.

For Mustawkima, a Rohingya woman who fled Myanmar for the refugee camps of neighboring Bangladesh, there is no other option.

Hers is a dilemma repeated over and over for many of the 900,000 Rohingya refugees living in ramshackle huts across this unsteady landscape: With the long-dreaded monsoon season now upon them, they have run out of places to run.

For months, officials raced to relocate the most at-risk families to safer areas that had been bulldozed flat, but there simply isn't enough available land. Most refugees believe it is too dangerous to return to Myanmar, where the military launched a brutal campaign of violence against the minority Rohingya Muslims last year. And so, as the rains begin to flood parts of the camps, many Rohingya find themselves trapped — by geography, by poverty and by fear.

The bamboo shelter on the crumbling hillside will be Mustawkima's third attempt at finding a home in the camps. She has had to do everything on her own; Her husband was killed when the military stormed their village in August 2017.

Mustawkima, who like some Rohingya uses only one name, abandoned her first shelter when the soil washed away. With five children under the age of 8, she wanted her new home to be close to relatives living at the base of the hill, so she erected a flimsy tarp halfway up. But when the rains began in June, the water quickly poured in, transforming her dirt floor into a muddy mess.

Frightened, she sold off some of her donated rations of rice, lentils and oil so she could hire men to build her a sturdier shelter in the same spot. The bamboo and sandbags were donated by aid agencies. She fears there isn't enough material, but she has no money to buy extra bamboo.

Families living in five shelters on the hill recently evacuated, she says. She can only hope that her relatives will protect her and her children when the worst of the rains arrive.

The most intense rains are expected over the next few months, though heavy downpours began pummeling the camps in June. There have already been more than 160 landslides, 30 people injured and one toddler killed, according to the Inter Sector Coordination Group, or ISCG, which oversees the aid agencies in the camps.

"Within 24 hours of the first rains falling, we were seeing small landslides and we were seeing flooding everywhere," says Daphnee Cook, a spokeswoman for Save the Children. "I've been here for seven months and I was appalled at how quickly things started to fall apart."

Afghan officials: IS bomber kills 20, Taliban kill 9 police

KABUL, Afghanistan (AP)—An Islamic State suicide bomber killed 20 people in northern Afghanistan on Tuesday, including a Taliban commander, while in southern Helmand province, a government commando unit freed 54 people from a Taliban-run jail, officials said.

In southern Kandahar province, the Taliban attacked a police checkpoint in Arghistan district late on Monday night, killing nine policemen and wounding seven, according to Daud Ahmadi, the spokesman for the provincial governor.

Zia Durrani, the provincial police spokesman, said 25 Taliban fighters were killed and 15 were wounded in the ensuing battle in Arghistan, a volatile districts close to the Pakistani border.

Afghanistan has faced intense attacks by both the Taliban and the country's Islamic State affiliate recently, even as Washington considers a Taliban demand for direct talks in hopes of jump-starting a negotiated end to what is now the longest military engagement by U.S. forces.

A Taliban official in Qatar, where the Taliban maintain an unofficial office, told The Associated Press the insurgents want direct talks and are ready to put troop withdrawal as well as any outstanding concerns the United States might have on the table—but that so far, no official request to open negotiations has come from Washington.

Speaking on condition of anonymity because he is not authorized to speak to the media, the Taliban official said de-listing Taliban leaders from U.S and U.N. watch lists and recognizing their office in Doha, Qatar's capital, would aid progress in talks, should they begin.

Meanwhile, in northern Afghanistan's Sar-i-Pul province, provincial police chief Abdul Qayum Baqizoi said Tuesday's attack by IS took place as village elders met with Taliban officials. He said 15 of the 20 killed were local elders and five were Taliban members, including a Taliban commander.

The Taliban and the Islamic State group have been waging bitter battles in recent days in northern Afghanistan. As many as 100 insurgents from both the Taliban and IS have died in the fighting, said Baqizoi.

However, provincial council chief Mohammed Noor Rahman gave a different account of the explosion, saying it occurred in a mosque as a funeral was taking place. The area is remote and it was impossible to reconcile the differing accounts.

Also Tuesday, in southern Helmand's Musa Qala district, a commando unit stormed a jail late Monday that Taliban insurgents had been operating. They found and freed 32 civilians, 16 policemen, four soldiers and two military doctors, said Omar Zwak, spokesman for the provincial governor.

The Taliban did not immediately comment on the raid, but the insurgents are in control of the majority of the districts in Helmand, where they have increased their attacks against provincial officials and security forces.

The Taliban have long refused direct talks with the Afghan government, demanding instead to negotiate with the U.S. They have maintained that position despite Afghan President Ashraf Ghani's unilateral extension of a holiday cease-fire last month in hopes of encouraging the Taliban to come to the negotiating table.

When the Taliban continued to mount deadly attacks, Ghani ordered government forces to resume military operations this month.

Obama delivers veiled rebuke to Trump in Mandela address

JOHANNESBURG (AP)—In his highest profile speech since leaving office, former U.S. President Barack Obama on Tuesday denounced the policies of President Donald Trump without mentioning his name, taking aim at the "politics of fear, resentment, retrenchment," and decrying leaders who are caught lying and "just double down and lie some more."

Obama was cheered by thousands in Johannesburg's Wanderers Stadium as he marked the centenary of Nelson Mandela's birth by urging respect for human rights, the free press and other values he said were under threat.

He rallied people to keep alive the ideals that the anti-apartheid activist worked for as the first black president of South Africa, including democracy, diversity, gender equality and tolerance.

Obama opened by calling today's times "strange and uncertain," adding that "each day's news cycle is bringing more head-spinning and disturbing headlines."

"We see much of the world threatening to return to a more dangerous, more brutal, way of doing business," he said.

A day after Trump met in Helsinki with Russian President Vladimir Putin, Obama criticized "strongman politics."

The "politics of fear, resentment, retrenchment" are on the move "at a pace unimaginable just a few years ago," Obama added.

"Those in power seek to undermine every institution ... that gives democracy meaning," he said.

The first African-American president of the United States spoke up for equality in all forms, adding: "I would have thought we had figured that out by now."

Obama praised the diversity of the World Cup champion French team, and he said that those countries engaging in xenophobia "eventually ... find themselves consumed by civil war."

He noted the "utter loss of shame among political leaders when they're caught in a lie and they just double down and lie some more," warning that the denial of facts—such as climate change—could be the undoing of democracy.

Tumult of Trump's Europe trip smashes presidential precedent

HELSINKI (AP)—Plenty of U.S. presidents have created commotion in their travels abroad, but none as much as President Donald Trump.

The president's tumultuous trip across Europe, historians say, smashed the conventions of American leaders on the world stage.

Trump's "America first" approach to foreign policy had him seeming to accept the word of a hostile power over his own intelligence agencies, insulting allies and sowing doubts about his commitment to the NATO alliance.

"We've never had a president go abroad and not only lecture to our NATO allies, but also to embarrass them," said Russia expert William Pomeranz, deputy director of the Kennan Institute at the Wilson Center. "We've never had our president go on a foreign tour and categorize our allies as foes. And we've never had our president hold a joint news conference with a Russian leader where he assigned blame, from his perspective, to both parties, but in fact dedicated most of his time to blaming the U.S. Justice Department and intelligence services."

While past presidents have had difficult foreign trips and been criticized for their summits with Soviet leaders, Trump's behavior has few parallels, in the view of presidential historians and longtime Russia watchers.

Franklin Roosevelt was accused of "selling out" to Joseph Stalin at the Yalta Conference in 1945; John F. Kennedy and his aides admitted that he'd been unprepared for his 1961 Vienna summit with Nikita Khrushchev; the Reykjavik summit between Ronald Reagan and Mikhail Gorbachev in 1986 was seen at the time to have ended in failure; and George W. Bush was mocked for telling reporters in 2001 after meeting with Putin that he had "looked the man in the eye" and "found him to be very straightforward and trustworthy."

Trump's trip was different. "Frankly, I don't think those U.S. presidents at any point came off as not pursuing U.S. security interests, as being taken in by the Soviet leader they were meeting with," said Alina Polyakova, a foreign policy fellow at the Brookings Institution. "I think even President George W. Bush's meeting, where he had that famous quote about looking into Putin's eyes and seeing into his soul—this summit dwarfs that by a factor of a thousand."

TO SAVE WORLD'S RAREST MARINE MAMMAL

Conservationists seek ban on Mexican seafood imports

By LOUIS SAHAGUN
LOS ANGELES TIMES

LOS ANGELES—A decade of rescue crusades by conservation groups, hard-core eco-activists and the U.S. Navy have failed to prevent the world's rarest porpoise from becoming fatally entangled in gill nets set for seafood in Mexico's northern Gulf of California.

Now, with less than 20 vaquita left in the wild, the prospect of the species' extinction within two years has prompted a last-ditch effort with significant economic and political consequences for the United States and Mexico.

Conservationists on Tuesday asked an international trade court judge in New York for a preliminary injunction banning imports of an estimated $16 million worth of fish and shrimp harvested with gill nets in an area of the gulf roughly a third the size of Los Angeles County and just three hours south of the border.

U.S. Court of International Trade Judge Gary Katzmann said he would rule within two weeks. His decision may hinge, in part, on whether the costs of implementing an embargo to save the species are greater than the costs of its disappearance.

An embargo on about 47 tons of corvina, 90 tons of sierra, 172 tons of chano and 1,150 tons of shrimp caught annually within 160 miles of the border "would create the necessary incentives to ensure that the Mexican government takes the gill net problem seriously," Giulia Good Stefani, an attorney representing the Natural Resources Defense Council in the case, said in an interview, "just as embargoes catalyzed the transition to dolphin-safe tuna and turtle-safe shrimp trawling."

Tighter control of the fishing industry may also help reduce the number of vaquita killed in gill nets that poachers use to snare a large endangered fish known as totoaba, whose swim bladders are prized on the black market in China, where they are believed to have medicinal properties.

A gill net is a wall of netting hung vertically in the water that lets a fish get its head, but not its body, through the mesh. The fish's gills get caught in the mesh as it tries to back out.

Katzmann took the request under consideration after hearing arguments presented by Good Stefani and Agatha Koprowski, a Department of Justice attorney representing defendants such as Commerce Secretary Wilbur Ross; Treasury Secretary Steven T. Mnuchin; Secretary of Homeland Security Kirstjen Nielsen, and Chris Oliver, assistant administrator of the National Marine Fisheries Service.

Koprowski argued that a judicially imposed import ban could threaten high-level ongoing negotiations between the United States and Mexico regarding the fate of the vaquita, and undermine Mexico's trust in the United States as a negotiating partner.

"As a result, Mexico might refuse to implement measures it would have otherwise considered," Koprowski said in documents filed with the court.

The lawsuit by the Natural Resources Defense Council, the Center for Biological Diversity and the Animal Welfare Institute contend that by allowing gill-net-caught fish and shrimp from the vaquita's range to be imported into the United States, the defendants are violating the Marine Mammal Protection Act, which requires the government to ban seafood from foreign fisheries that kill or injure marine mammals at a rate above U.S. standards.

The unprecedented decline of vaquita — now falling about 50 percent of its population each year — does not meet U.S. standards. Scientists say the vaquita population has dwindled from 567 in a 1997 survey to fewer than 20.

TNS
Sea Shepherd activists work to remove gill nets and other illegal fishing lines from a protected area in the Sea of Cortez which is the habitat of the highly endangered Vaquita Marina porpoise and the endangered Totoaba fish, in April 2017.

In documents filed with the court in a related lawsuit, Mexico's National Chamber of Fisheries and Aquaculture Industries argued that the protection act lacks the authority to impose an emergency ban on foreign fish products. A dismissal, it added, would provide Mexico's regulatory authorities with more time to improve vaquita protection measures.

The vaquita, whose name translates as "little cow," is the world's smallest porpoise, with the smallest geographical range of any marine mammal. Its chubby frame and black-ringed eyes have earned it the nickname "panda of the sea." No marine mammal faces such an immediate threat of extinction.

Recent necropsies on dead vaquitas showed "there are still breeding females out there and the animals are eating," Sarah Uhleman, international program director at the Center for Biological Diversity, said in an interview. "So, the species still has a chance."

Meanwhile, tensions are escalating among conservationists, Mexican fishermen, whose livelihoods are threatened by tighter fishing controls, and poachers in the illegal totoaba trade which, authorities say, is more lucrative than cocaine trafficking.

The U.S. conservation group Sea Shepherd has sent boats to the gulf to monitor gill-netting activities. A year ago, a fisherman shot down a drone that belonged to Sea Shepherd, authorities said. In a separate incident last year, fishermen in the port town of San Felipe painted "Sea Shepherd" on the side of an old boat and burned it.

In early 2017, the U.S. Navy deployed trained bottlenose dolphins to help capture some of the remaining vaquita so they could be taken to a protected pen. That effort was scrapped in November when an adult female vaquita died after a few hours in captivity.

Conservationists fear the consequences of another gill-net fishing season.

"The weight on our side of the legal scale in this matter is extinction," Uhleman said. "It doesn't get more serious than that."

Florida to restrict shore-based shark fishing at many public beaches

By DAVID FLESHLER
SUN SENTINEL

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla.—The controversial fishing practice of catching large sharks from shore could be banned from many of Florida's public beaches, restricted to nighttime hours or subjected to other limits, under options being considered to protect both swimmers and the sharks.

The Florida Fish and Wildlife Conservation Commission voted last April to impose limits on shore-based shark fishing, an activity that produces dramatic Instagram photos and YouTube videos of anglers reeling in 12-foot hammerheads and tiger sharks. Nine workshops have been scheduled around the state, with specific proposals tentatively scheduled to go to the commission in December.

Swimmers have expressed concern that the activity could endanger them by luring large sharks closer to shore, although a scientist from the wildlife commission has said there's no evidence for this. But scientists and conservationists have also criticized the dragging ashore of sharks for photos and videos before releasing them.

William Fundora (left) of the South Florida Shark Club and Colby Uva (right) unhook a sandbar shark while fishing off the north end of Delray Beach. The city may soon ban land-based shark fishing.

They say the practice — which is illegal in the case of protected species such as great hammerheads — could be difficult for many sharks to survive.

"Physiologically, fragile species like hammerheads need to be left in the water where they can breathe, not dragged across rough sand or concrete while being unable to breathe," said David Shiffman, a shark biologist who had been a critic of shore-based shark fishing while a graduate student at the University of Miami.

"I'm thrilled to see FWC considering many of our expert suggestions," he said. "As it's currently practiced, land-based shark fishing in Florida results in the needless deaths of threatened, protected species. These regulatory changes will help reduce those deaths, and will do so without in any way infringing on the rights of conservation-minded, rule-following anglers."

During the April meeting, some commissioners said the activity showed a disrespect for wildlife, particularly when people hold open the mouth of the beached sharks and perch on their backs.

"Some of those pictures that were shown on social media were disgraceful," Commissioner Joshua Kellam said. "I think that just morally people should be ashamed of themselves to post stuff like that, to do that stuff to animals. People who do these things should be punished for their actions."

The commission, a seven-member board appointed by Gov. Rick Scott, told its staff to come up with proposals for limiting the activity.

Among the options: Requiring a special permit for shore-based shark fishing, limiting chumming from shore, restricting the activity to nighttime and banning it from public beaches protected by lifeguards.

To protect the sharks, the state put forward several options. It could prohibit tournaments from offering prizes for catching protected species. It could ban the use of gear more likely to injure the sharks. And to make sure sharks are released as quickly as possible, it could prohibit removing them from the water, measuring them or delaying their release for any reason.

Robin Williams speaks for himself in new HBO documentary

NEW YORK (AP)—When filmmaker Marina Zenovich sought to make a documentary about Robin Williams, she found that she could do it largely in the late comedian's own voice.

"Robin Williams: Come Inside My Mind," uses a wealth of archival footage to put viewers inside his thought process—mirroring a routine Williams used as an up-and-coming comic in the 1970s.

The film, which includes interviews with David Letterman and Billy Crystal, premiered Monday on HBO and is available on its streaming service, HBO Now. Friends and relatives, including Williams' son Zak, also share memories.

"I get sad when I think about Billy and Robin because when I interviewed him (Crystal) you could really feel a sense of loss," the filmmaker

Prince Harry, Meghan visit Nelson Mandela exhibition

LONDON (AP)—Prince Harry and his wife Meghan have visited an exhibition in London charting the life of Nelson Mandela.

Peter Hain, a former anti-apartheid campaigner and chair of the Nelson Mandela Centenary Exhibition, said it was "very fitting" for the royal couple to visit because Harry does charitable work in southern Africa, and Meghan has said that Mandela is one of her heroes.

Harry has visited sites associated with Mandela, including his Robben Island prison cell, and a former Mandela aide has said that Queen Elizabeth II enjoyed a solid friendship with the South African leader.

Meghan chose a sleeveless beige trench coat-inspired dress by Canadian brand Nonie for the occasion.

The exhibition, curated by the Apartheid Museum in Johannesburg, is opening Tuesday at London's Southbank Center.

Widow returns to the dating pool and finds troubled water

DEAR ABBY: I was widowed seven years ago. When my husband died, I thought it was the end of my suffering. It had been a mentally and physically abusive marriage for 30 years. We were complete opposites and were always financially stressed.

I have decided to start dating again. I want to meet someone and hopefully feel loved. I joined a dating website, but the men on it look disturbed and creepy. I have no friends, and I feel like I'm dying. I'm 57. Where are all the good men? I am at a loss.

My boss told me I should consider dating women since I have had no luck meeting men. She is pushing me into meeting her lesbian friend. Her friend was in an abusive marriage, and her husband is no longer in her life. Abby, I'm shocked that she would even suggest it.

I'm considering quitting my job because it's awkward being around my boss. She started joking about it with other co-workers until I told her to stop bringing up the subject. Even though she has curbed her tongue, the fact still remains that my co-workers know she wanted to match me with a woman. I cringe working around her and want to crawl under a rock. Please help.

LONGING TO BE LOVED

DEAR LONGING: It's time to join some different dating sites and enlarge your pool of dating prospects. However, when you do, keep in mind that your marital history may have negatively affected your judgment about men. "Dating" does not carry with it a guarantee of love. Your relationship with your husband should have shown you that. Also, because a man doesn't photograph well does not mean he's disturbed or creepy. (One woman's creep can be another woman's Prince Charming.)

That said, if I ever heard about creating a hostile work environment, what your boss did is a textbook example and should have been discussed with HR. "Joking" about an employee's sexuality is considered to be both discriminatory and a form of sexual harassment. Her behavior was beyond the pale, and you should start looking for another job.

DEAR ABBY: My 47-year-old son is employed at a prestigious university. His position involves a considerable amount of travel.

Over the years, he always emailed us his travel plans along with flight information. Lately, he tells us when and where he is going but omits the flight, hotel information, etc. When we ask, our requests are ignored. When we tell him we think it's irresponsible for him not to share this information, his response is, "My secretary has the information if there are any problems."

We always give our children our travel information, flights,

At 33, Ronaldo says age isn't important

TURIN, Italy (AP)—At the age of 33, many football players are past their peak. Cristiano Ronaldo vows to show he is not one of them.

Juventus signed Ronaldo from Real Madrid last week for 112 million euros ($131.5 million) —an Italian league record sum—and the world player of the year penned a four-year contract.

Some see it as an extravagant sum for a player who, although a five-time Ballon d'Or winner, is entering the latter stages of a glittering career.

At his first news conference as a Juventus player on Monday, Ronaldo insisted he was motivated by a new challenge and keen to step out of his comfort zone after nine years at Madrid.

"With all due respect, usually players of my age go to Qatar or China, so coming to such an outstanding club at this stage in my career makes me very happy," he said.

"I'm different from all the other players who think their career is over at my age. I want to show that I'm not like the others, I'm different. It's an emotional moment for me because I'm not 23, I'm 33."

"I'm not here on holiday," he added. "I want to mark the history of Juventus. I hope I can surprise everyone one last time and I'm very, very confident."

Ronaldo has always been credited with a phenomenal workrate, and he has promised to continue that at Juventus in order to prolong his longevity.

AP
Portuguese ace Ronaldo salutes his fans as he arrives to undergo medical checks at the Juventus stadium in Turin, Italy, Monday, July 16, 2018.

"I'm looking forward to starting the league well and to try to win every title."

On his arrival at Allianz Stadium for his medical on Monday, Ronaldo was greeted by hundreds of fans, who chanted his name and "Portaci la Champions" ("Bring us the Champions League trophy").

Juventus hasn't won the Champions League since 1996. It has been on the losing side in the final five times since then, including twice in the past four editions.

Juventus has won the Serie A for the last seven seasons—and done the league and Italian Cup double for the past four—but has struggled to transfer its domestic supremacy to the European stage.

Ronaldo has won the Champions League four times in the past five seasons. He has a record 120 Champions League goals, 105 of them at Madrid, 12 more than Juventus as a team managed in that same period.

"Juventus has been one step away from it and couldn't win," Ronaldo said. "I hope I can be the lucky charm."

The Portugal forward moved from Manchester United to Real Madrid in 2009, and became the Spanish club's all-time leading scorer with 451 in 438 matches. He helped Madrid win four Champions Leagues—beating Juventus in the final in 2017—and also won La Liga and the Copa del Rey twice each.

Ronaldo, who also led Portugal to the European Championship in 2016, also won the Champions League at Manchester United as well as three Premier Leagues and the FA Cup.

He expects his winning ways to continue at the Serie A champion.

"It will be tough, I know that," Ronaldo said. "The league is very tough but Juve is ready and I will be ready. The age is not important. I feel good, I feel motivated. I will try to do my best like always."

Steve Kerr receives contract extension from Warriors

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP)—Golden State Warriors coach Steve Kerr has received a contract extension following the franchise's repeat championship and third title in four years during his tenure.

Kerr and general manager Bob Myers, who are close friends and colleagues, said when the season ended that something would get done quickly once they began formal discussions. Kerr had one year remaining on his original $25 million, five-year contract. Details of the extension were not announced Tuesday.

"We're excited to have Steve under contract and poised to lead our team for the next several years," Myers said in a statement released by the team. "Under his guidance, we've been fortunate enough to win three NBA titles in four years and his ability to thrive in all facets of his job is certainly a primary reason for our success. He's a terrific coach, but more importantly an incredible human being."

The 52-year-old Kerr has said he hopes to coach at least another decade and perhaps 15 years. His Warriors swept LeBron James and Cleveland in the fourth straight NBA Finals matchups between the rivals.

Kerr stayed healthy and on the bench while continuing to deal with symptoms such as headaches and dizzy spells stemming from a pair of back surgeries following the 2015 title.

The Warriors marked themselves as a dynasty with their latest crown. They joined Bill Russell's Boston Celtics, the Chicago Bulls led by Michael Jordan and the Lakers' trio of title runs fueled by George Mikan in the 1950s, Magic Johnson and Kareem Abdul-Jabbar in the '80s, and Shaquille O'Neal and Kobe Bryant nearly 20 years ago as the only franchises in NBA history to capture three championships in four years.

Golden State captured the franchise's first title in 40 years during 2014-15, with Kerr as a rookie head coach. Now, the Warriors are gearing up for one more season in Oracle Arena before opening their state-of-the-art Chase Center in San Francisco's Mission Bay neighborhood in August 2019.

James offered a shoutout to Kerr during the finals.

"I could sit here and say today—'Listen, Golden State is a great team ...'—I didn't even mention their head coach," James said. "Their head coach is the one who kind of puts it all together, makes it all flow. To be able to put egos and the right position and spot on the floor where everybody feels good about the outcome and things of that nature -- when it comes to team sports, that's something that you would hope that you could be a part of."

Kerr owns a 265-63 record (.808), guiding the Warriors to a record 73-win season in 2015-16 before a runner-up finish to the Cavaliers. His Warriors then went a record 16-1 during the 2017 postseason on the way to another title.

He was tested more as a coach this season, aside from his 43-game absence to begin the 2015-16 season when then-top assistant and current Lakers coach Luke Walton led the Warriors to a record 24-0 start and 39-4 mark before Kerr's return to the bench.

Late in the regular season this year, Golden State lost seven of 10 during one noteworthy funk for a team that when healthy starts four All-Stars and can score in flurries with a pass-happy offense that racks up assists.

For weeks ahead of the 2018 playoffs, the Warriors hardly looked like that super team that dominated through the previous postseason. They lost their final regular-season game at Utah by 40 points.

Yet Kerr and his players insisted all along they would find another level when there was something bigger to play for.

Kerr was forced to use a mindboggling 27 different starting lineups to get through the regular season and wind up a No. 2 seed behind Houston, with the Western Conference finals marking the first time the Warriors had to open a series on the road since 2014.

World Cup winner Mbappe donating $350,000 bonus

PARIS (AP)—Teenage World Cup winner Kylian Mbappe is giving his bonus to an association that puts sports in the lives of hospitalized children.

The head of Premiers de Cordee (First in Line), Sebastien Ruffin, says France clinched the World Cup he was informed that Mbappe would give the group his bonus if the team qualified for the quarterfinals.

French Football Federation chief Noel Le Graet confirmed in Sunday's Journal du Dimanche that other associations also would benefit from the France forward's largesse—"about 300,000 euros ($350,000)."

Mbappe mentors the kids, and Ruffin said the player has "very good contact" with them: "I sometimes feel he gets more pleasure playing with kids than they do."

In Iceland, the coach that led Iceland to its first World Cup has stepped down.

The Icelandic Football Association says Heimir

Hallgrímsson has decided to leave at his own request, ending seven years in the role.

Hallgrímsson was the co-coach with Lars Lagerback of Sweden at the European Championship in 2016, when Iceland reached the quarterfinals after beating England.

After Lagerback left, Hallgrímsson assumed sole control of the national team, which became the least populous team to ever play at a World Cup. Iceland drew with Argentina in its opening group game but failed to advance to the knockout stage.

Hellgrímsson is a part-time dentist.

In Russia, the four protesters who barged onto the field at the World Cup final in Moscow have been sentenced to 15 days in jail.

The protesters, members of the Pussy Riot punk collective, ran onto the pitch at Luzhniki Stadium dressed as police officers during the second half of Sunday's match between France and Croatia.

Record 10 homers set, AL wins All-Star Game

WASHINGTON (AP)—A record 10 home runs. A slew of strikeouts.

The all-or-nothing All-Star Game mirrored what baseball has become.

Astros teammates Alex Bregman and George Springer homered on consecutive pitches to begin the 10th inning, and the American League beat the National League 8-6 Tuesday night for its sixth straight win.

“Standard operation nowadays, right?” said AL manager A.J. Hinch of Houston. “We’re going to homer and punch out as an industry.”

“There’s a great love affair with both results. I mean, to kind of empty your tank and hit homers tonight at this event is probably the best thing imaginable,” he said. “Just to have that kind of emotion that comes with the home run, especially when the big boys hit it and especially when the Astros hit it.”

Mike Trout, Aaron Judge and Jean Segura also connected for the AL in a game where every run except one scored on a homer.

Scooter Gennett hit a tying two-run shot off Seattle closer Edwin Diaz in the bottom of the ninth. Joey Votto, Willson Contreras, Trevor Story, Christian Yelich also homered for the NL.

There had never been more than six homers in an All-Star Game since Babe Ruth hit the very first one in 1933.

One of the homers came off Milwaukee’s Josh Hader. After the game, the 24-year reliever took responsibility for racist and homophobic tweets that resurfaced while he was pitching.

Hader said he was immature at age 17 when several of the tweets were posted, but at least one was from 2016 about the shooting of unarmed black teenager Trayvon Martin. Deputy Commissioner Dan Halem said he had spoken to Hader, and the league would have no comment before Wednesday.

“There’s no excuse for what was said,” Hader said. “I’m deeply sorry for what I’ve said and what’s been going on. It doesn’t reflect any of my beliefs going on now.”

While several sluggers went deep, not everything went their way. Starters Max Scherzer and Chris Sale and the relievers combined to fan 15 in the first 4 1/2 innings, and there were 25 strikeouts overall.

Fitting, because this season is on pace to become the first with more strikeouts than hits, a year after a record number of home runs.

“You’re facing power pitchers right now, so that’s kind of what you expect: hit-or-miss with these guys,” Boston’s

Houston Astros Alex Bregman (2) hits a solo home run during the 89th MLB baseball All-Star Game, Tuesday, July 17, 2018, at Nationals Park, in Washington. The American League won, 8-6.

J.D. Martinez said.

Martinez, who leads the majors in homers and RBI, singled and struck out in his two at-bats.

Orioles shortstop Manny Machado had fun, pulling out a camera to snap a selfie at second base after Matt Kemp doubled. By Wednesday, they could be teammates—Baltimore seems ready to trade Machado, with the Dodgers and Phillies in the mix.

“I’m just trying to enjoy this moment with the American League guys,” Machado told FOX in the dugout. “If this is the last time (in a Baltimore uniform), hopefully I treated them well and did everything I can for the organization.”

Major League Baseball, meanwhile, seemed to take a selfie of itself, with all the homers and strikeouts. This was MLB 2018, an update that’s not appealing to everyone.

“Some of us are going to get them and they’re going to get us. It’s just how it goes,” Atlanta first baseman Freddie Freeman said.

Declining attendance is a concern, and the sport’s owners worry that slower games with less action on the bases are taking a toll.

A day after hometown star Bryce Harper electrified the crowd by winning the Home Run Derby, it was eerily quiet for most of the evening at Nationals Park. Harper didn’t excite the fans, either, fanning in his two at-bats.

The popular Presidents

Race drew the biggest cheer in the middle innings, with the big-headed George Washington character prevailing.

The only thing missing was a bevy of defensive shifts. Overloaded infields are the norm now, Hinch and NL manager Dave Roberts of the Dodgers pretty much played things straight up.

Bregman and Springer homered off losing pitcher Ross Stripling of the Dodgers — that’s kind of how last year ended, too, with Houston battering Los Angeles pitchers in the World Series.

Bregman smiled all around the bases and earned MVP honors. He’s familiar with this city, his grandfather having been the general counsel for the old Washington Senators.

“My dad grew up on Ted Williams’ lap. So to see Ted Williams Most Valuable Player on this trophy is pretty special,” Bregman said.

Segura’s three-run homer in the eighth landed in the bullpen and broke a 2-all tie. The Seattle infielder popped up the previous pitch, but Votto, Cincinnati’s reliable first baseman, dropped it for an error as he approached the dugout railing. Segura then connected off Hader.

Judge homered in the second off Scherzer, the Nationals ace who became the first reigning Cy Young Award winner to start an All-Star Game in his home park.

Orioles may trade Machado to Dodgers

WASHINGTON (AP)—

The Los Angeles Dodgers are making preparations to welcome Manny Machado into their pennant race.

Los Angeles entered the All-Star break with a narrow half-game lead over second-place Arizona in the NL West, and there’s a good chance the Dodgers will begin play Friday in Milwaukee with a four-time All-Star at shortstop.

Machado will undoubtedly be dealt by the Baltimore Orioles before the July non-waiver trade deadline, and speculation is centering upon a Wednesday swap with Los Angeles.

“I had a conversation with Manny. He’s a great guy, man, and we would love to have him here,” Dodgers All-Star pitcher Kenley Jansen said Tuesday night.

The Dodgers begin a 10-game road trip out of the break, and they’d love to have Machado dressed in Dodger blue.

“I think the sky’s the limit.

We can do damage,” Jansen said. “Let’s see what’s going to happen.”

If Machado heads to the Dodgers, he will likely get to wear his coveted No. 13, now worn by first baseman Max Muncy.

“He deserves that number,” Jansen said.

In spite of the media that followed his every move, Machado did his best Tuesday to enjoy himself. He walked the red carpet shirtless in a double-breasted suit, took a couple selfies on the field and smiled through six innings of carefree baseball.

When he was done, Machado peeled off his Orioles uniform for perhaps the final time.

Then he walked out of Nationals Stadium with his family, not bothering to stick around after the game to answer another round of questions about a potential trade that would end his stay in Baltimore — perhaps before the Orioles return from the break to play in Toronto on Friday night.

In the meantime, Machado was the center of attention before and during the first All-Star Game in Washington since 1969.

A huge media throng buzzed around his locker prior to batting practice. During BP, Machado joked with Dodgers outfielder Matt Kemp outside the cage.

Then came the game. Machado went 0 for 2—a fly ball and a popup—before exiting for a pinch hitter in the sixth inning.

“I’m just trying to enjoy this moment with the American League guys,” Machado told FOX in the dugout. “If this is the last time (in a Baltimore uniform), hopefully I treated them well and did everything I can for the organization.”

Walking out toward the exit ramp, Machado ran into Nick Markakis, a longtime former teammate now with the Atlanta Braves. They hugged, shook hands and walked away.

Earlier, the pair crossed paths on the field.

“I ran up to him and he started reaching into his pocket. I didn’t know what he was doing,” Markakis said. “Pulled out his phone. We took a picture on the field. It was a pretty cool moment. Pretty cool for him to do. I enjoyed my time playing with him. He’s a great teammate, a great dude. Whatever happens with him after today, I wish him luck.”

It appears as if Los Angeles is going to be the place to be for Machado, who’s batting .315 with 24 homers and 65 RBI.

“Things are getting serious now,” Dodgers right-hander Ross Stripling said. “That’s the kind of bat and the kind of player that you want in your lineup.”

Kemp, a three-time All-Star, said of Machado: “He’s actually one of my favorite players to watch. I hit with him in the offseason two years ago. He’s a great player. If that’s something that happens I think LA would be excited about it and (it would) definitely help our team win more games.”

CNMI Little League players watch pro game in Korea

CNMI Little League players and their parents watch the action between the KT Wiz and Samsung Lions at the Suwon Stadium in South Korea.

SAIPANPLAY, a travel agency specializing in the Saipan market and other islands in the Pacific for Korean travelers, hosted the CNMI All-Star baseball teams from Saipan and Rota while they were in Korea to participate in the 2018 Asia Pacific-Middle East Regional Tournament.

The ASPAC was held at the Hwaseong Dream Park Baseball Field from June 30 to July 6. It had 19 teams from 13 countries, such as the CNMI, Guam, Taiwan, Hong Kong, New Zealand and host Korea, to name a few.

The CNMI Major All-Stars

made up of Saipan players and the CNMI 50/70 Intermediate Team from Rota were extremely thankful for the opportunity to attend a Korean Baseball Organization professional game at the Suwon Stadium to watch the host KT Wiz take on the Samsung Lions.

"Saipan and Rota are small islands in the CNMI that has a total population of about 50,000. But, the interest in baseball is very strong and we hope to see the sport of baseball gain more support not only from SAIPANPLAY but other organizations", said SAIPANPLAY CEO Shin. "We decided to host the youth baseball teams so they can have a meaningful and enjoyable experience at a professional baseball game here in Korea. I was happy to hear that they had a great time!"

SAIPANPLAY not only hosted the players but also the managers, coaches, league officials from Saipan and Rota and the parents that traveled to watch their kids play in the tournament.

"We can't thank SAIPAN-PLAY enough for their generosity in hosting us," said one of the parents. "They provided great seats to watch the game, dinner and drinks, and most especially an experience that our kids will never forget."

"SAIPANPLAY was so thrilled that the CNMI baseball players enjoyed the game so much cheering on host team KT Wiz as if the youth were from Suwon, South Korea. The event was so successful that SAIPANPLAY has committed to continue to support the CNMI baseball teams when they return to Korea next year," Shin said. (PR)

CNMI Men's National Team pool's training camp and will join the U15 squad in China next week, as the EAFF-sanctioned tournament will run from July 21 to 29. The U15 national squad has midfielder Razeff Altamirano, Taka Borja, Ian Karl Maniago, Floyd Muna, Reginald Pascual, Brandon Tenorio, Merrick Toves, and John Joseph Villagomez, defenders John Ezekiel Canape, Brian Lubao, Daniel Mar Pablo, Rinto Takahashi, and Elijah Villamero, forwards Oliver Fajardo and Rintaro Miyawaki, and goalkeepers Jonathan Mindanao, John Martin Palad, and Jason Quimzon as members.

NMIFA held a send-off ceremony yesterday for the U15 crew along with the CNMI Boys U16 National Team that will head to the Philippines for the Tuloy XO Cup, which will run from July 31 to Aug. 5.

"Japan and China are our toughest opponents and it's a great opportunity for us to play against the Asian giants. Our strategy is play our soccer, which is not only about defending but also attacking to score goals and win the game. We will play against the giants and in all the games we will try to score," said Mita.

Besides Japan and China, the Teen Ayuyus will also duel Chinese-Taipei, Mongolia, and Macau. South Korea, North Korea, Guam, and Hong Kong complete the tournament and they are in Pool B.

Mita said the U15 players are doing well in their training sessions with the help of assistant coach Jerishwin Angeles and CNMI Men's National Team captain Jon Takano.

"We are all enjoying the real quality new soccer pitch. The boys take this tournament very seriously as they are working hard every day. We are improving on team understanding and chemistry. Players try to understand what do we do in attacking, defending, and transition moment. They try to maximize team play," Mita said.

"We still need to improve our quality techniques—with players able to play in any situation under pressure or less space. We don't have many opportunities to play against strong opponents, so every time we go out, we always think we our playing against strong opponents," the head coach added.

Mita will also call the shots for the U16 team, which is made up of Altamirano, Taka Borja, Canape, Lubao, Mindanao, Miyawaki, Quimzon, Takahashi, Toves, Kirt Andon, Thaiph Austria, Ichiro Borja, Kaden Church, Mark Esalan, Sebastien Manabat, Joshua Mendez, John Michael Rojas, Joshua Waldo, and Richard Waldo Jr. The head coach is anticipating a lot of tight matches in the XO Cup.

"All international tournaments are very tough for us. Even Philippine football is improving a lot these days. This tournament is going to be tough for us, but our goal is to be champions," Mita said.

"The U16 boys got a very good experience in last year AFC U16. We lost a lot of goals, but at same time the boys learned a lot. They knew the real international level of play," he added.

In the XO Cup, the CNMI will play against Luenthai Soccer School, Tuloy sa Don Bosco, Makati Football Club, Don Bosco Technical College Cebu, and Chelsea FC Soccer School (Hong Kong).

Meanwhile, NMIFA Executive Committee member Patty Coleman led the well-wishers for the two youth national teams yesterday at the NMI Soccer Training Center and thanked all the people who made the CNMI's participation to the two off-island tournaments possible.

"This is an incredible opportunity for players of our small islands to play against countries with millions of people. Show them the CNMI fighting spirit and cherish every single moment of the tournament," Coleman said.

Woods says British Open becomes best shot at a major

CARNOUSTIE, Scotland (AP)—Tiger Woods doesn't feel as old at the oldest championship in golf.

Back at the British Open for the first time in three years, Woods broke from his tradition on Tuesday morning. Instead of being among the first on the tee for practice, he didn't show up at Carnoustie until his news conference just before lunch. Then, he played nine holes with Masters champion Patrick Reed and Bryson DeChambeau.

This was not a case of a 42-year-old needing his rest.

Entering the year having not played any major since the end of 2015 and the start of three back surgeries, Woods has been feeling better as 2018 has gone on. And there's something about links golf that inspires him.

The CNMI pulled off a thrilling 1-0 victory over its toughest challenger, Palau, last night in the baseball competition in the 9th Micronesian Games in Yap.

Virgil Sechamidal made the dagger off Palau's couple of errors down the homestretch. The CNMI catcher scored on a bunt, as Palau's catcher had a wild throw to first base with the ball going to the side of the fence. With the booboo, Sechamidal ran from second to third base and then all the way to home plate, as Palau's right fielder when it takes on Pohnpei at 3pm. Pohnpei has a 1-1 mark in the tournament, losing to Palau last Monday, 5-9, and winning over Yap last Tuesday night, 16-1.

Guam got the gold and silver, courtesy of Genina Criss (2:27.45) and Madison Packbier (2:31.20).

In the women's triple jump, Jerlyn Castillo made it to the podium after recording 8.68m. Guam's Richelle Tigade (9.86m) and the Marshall Islands' Rosemaline Watley (9.23m) bagged the gold and silver, respectively.
